Council approves swap

City responsible for relocating tenants from city hall site

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

The West Sacramento City Council last week unanimously approved a deal to trade property with developer Frank Ramos so that the city can build its first long-term city hall, on property owned by Ramos at Merkley Ave. and West Capitol Ave.

"It may not be permanent, but this is to be a long-term facility," said Christopher Cabaldon, the city's vice mayor. "(The design) can accommodate some growth in city staff."

The city will trade 3.29 acres it has acquired along Tower Court, near the east end of West Capitol Ave., for the 2.5 acre Ramos parcel. Selling bonds, it plans to build a city hall/community center facility and a senior center on the Merkley Ave. property near the current Arthur F. Turner branch library.

The city property has been appraised at $1.2 million; while the Ramos property has been appraised at $1 million. The developer has agreed to clear the Merkley site, and after these costs are deducted, any remaining difference in the two ends of the deal will be paid to the city.

At Wednesday's meeting, the city agreed to handle the relocation of a church and two businesses currently at the site.

"We were reluctant to get involved in that because of our terrible experience in relocating residential tenants," said Cabaldon, citing lawsuits that stemmed over relocation of tenants at places like Lighthouse Marina and the former Vacation Inn. "But because we're the agency purchasing the property, we will have a legal obligation for relocation. Our sense is that we want to be in control of that because we're going to be liable for the results."

Cabaldon said the council discussed the relocation as probably costing "less than a couple of hundred thousand."

The city is currently renting most of its offices from a Ramos/Buzz Oates partnership which bought the former city hall at 2101 Stone Blvd.; before the city's ownership of that property, it had served as the Port of Sacramento's headquarters.

The new location is intended partly to spur economic growth on the city's West Capitol Ave. corridor. Design work is proceeding and construction is expected to be complete by late 1999.

ED HOCKING: candidate for Washington Unified school board

Editor's note: As is the News-Ledger's usual practice, we will endeavor to bring our readers a look at each of the candidates running for local office on the November ballot. Invitations for interviews will be extended to each of the 11 candidates running for three school board seats, and to each of the four locals running for election to the West Sacramento City Council. Following is the first of these interviews.

ED HOCKING

West Sacramento resident Ed Hocking -- who threw his name into the ring when the Washington Unified School District board of trustees made an abortive attempt to fill a board vacancy in 1997 -- is back in the race for a school board seat.

Hocking, 48, brings a basic philosophy that the district's current school board needs a push in the direction of more responsiveness to the public.

"One of the things the current board is doing wrong is they're keeping distance from the citizens of the community," said Hocking. "They're not addressing the needs of the individuals, and people who address the board (at meetings) are frequently cut short."

Hocking suggested a few changes to the way the board now conducts its business, including posting the agenda in advance on a school district internet site and including regular reports from the districts' parent-teachers associations (PTAs), teachers' union and staff union to the school board at meetings.

"I would also like to begin rotating the meetings to the schools," he added, instead of in the same board room every time. "This community has some low income areas, and some people have transportation issues. Also, people feel closer to their school than they do to the district office."

So holding the meetings at local school sites will help increase community involvement, Hocking argued.

Hocking praised the current board's efforts at putting a school bond on an upcoming ballot, saying "we need a school bond because our schools are too crowded and too dilapidated. We need a new high school and middle school." But he echoed

Miller, Cahill file complaints

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Two of the four candidates in the West Sacramento City Council race have filed complaints regarding a mailer sent out by another candidate in that race.

Challengers Marna Miller and Jim Cahill have alleged that the newsletter sent out by incumbent council member Christopher Cabaldon to city residents was not, as he says, simply a mailer sent out by an official to his constituents, but was instead a campaign flyer which misused the city seal and broke other campaign rules.

"I don't think this is a major sin," said Miller. "I'm just irritated because this starts from '96, when his (campaign literature) talked about 'evil people' who took contributions of more than a hundred dollars. Now he uses his expertise to manipulate the system. He's twice as smart as all of the rest of us because of his time working in the political system."

Miller said that she had received a very passive response from the state Fair Political Practices Commission after it received her complaint. Candidate Jim Cahill reported he had separately sent a complaint.

Miller's alleges that the brochure -- which championed Cabaldon's views of city issues and his performance on the council but did not carry an explicit campaign message -- was a campaign flyer that should have included a statement of who paid for it, a registration number with the Secretary of State, and a campaign address. It should not have included a photo of Cabaldon, she added.

Cabaldon told the News-Ledger last week that the mailing was not sent at campaign expense, but was a long-planned newsletter to the city paid for out of money raised by him for his duties and communications as a public official -- a separate account altogether. As such, he said, the newsletter was entitled to use the city seal and did not have to adhere to campaign flyer regulations.

He said this week that he used the only mailing list he had -- a registered voters' list -- but that was appropriate.

"The voters are the foundation of our democracy and I think it is perfectly appropriate for a council member to send a mailing to them," he commented.

"If Jim and Marna need a government agency to tell them it's O.K. for a city council member to send a mailing to his constituents, more power to them."

About Town:

Frank Ramos: prominent developer with city roots

By Daryl Fisher
Features Editor

FRANK and JOANNE RAMOS

After spending the early years of his youth in the idyllic Delta town of Ryde, Frank Ramos moved with his family to the farming community of Nicholas, which is on the Feather River near Marysville and Yuba City. He attended East Nicholas High School, and that is where he met his wife to be, Joanne.

"I guess I was attracted to Frank at first because he was the new boy in town," recalled Joanne, "and it wasn't long before we were going to all the dances together."

By the time Frank graduated from high school, the Korean War had broken out and he soon found himself in the United States Marines and on a ship he thought was headed for the war zone.

"Back then they didn't give you your orders until you were actually on the ship," explained Frank, "and me and my buddies just assumed we were all headed for Korea. When they told me I was going to Hawaii instead, I was just young enough and stupid enough to actually be disappointed. A lot of fine young men died in the Korean War, and I consider myself very lucky that things worked out the way they did."

When his military service was up, Frank returned to the States and married Joanne on June 19th, 1954. She had completed her education and was teaching typing and bookkeeping at Dixon High School. They had written to each other every day while Frank had been away and he had also asked her to knit him a bunch of socks.

"It turned out that he didn't really need the socks," said Joanne with a laugh. "He just wanted to keep me busy when he was gone."

"When I got home, I took a job with the Dixon Construction Company," said Frank, "and let me tell you, that was really backbreaking work. They did irrigation construction, and my job was to carry buckets full of cement back and forth. I think it's really good to have a job like that early in your life. It makes you realize just how hard a lot of people have to work in this world to get ahead, and it also helps you appreciate the good times when they finally come."

When Frank and Joanne decided to move to West Sacramento, Frank was still driving an old Model-A Ford and they rented a tiny apartment on Tower Street near the rice mill. The man who was renting the house in front of them was none other than Whitey Boisclair, the soon-to-be founder of West Sacramento's Whitey's Jolly Kone.

"Frank and Joanne's place was actually just a two-car garage which had been fixed up to look like an apartment," recalled Whitey. "But those two young people could have cared less. They were very much in love and having the time of their lives. Both of them were very hard workers and just as nice as could be. The thing I remember most about those days is that we shared the same wash room and many was the night that Joanne and I washed our clothes together. Frank has always been a good, honest man, and he deserves everything that has come his way."

About this time, Frank decided that he wanted to own his own gas station, but Shell wouldn't sell him one until he had some experience in the business, so he took a job at a Sacramento station owned by Clarksburg farmer Fritz Reamer.

"Fritz is always telling everyone that he taught me everything I know about the gas and oil business," said Frank with a big smile, "but what he doesn't say is that I was the one who was coming in every morning at six o'clock, about four hours before he got there, and that I was also still there about four hours after Fritz had called it a day and gone home."

Frank finally got his own gas station at 901 Park Boulevard, even though he and Joanne only had $37 dollars left in their bank account when the deal was closed. It wasn't long, however, before Frank wisely traded it for a dealership, and within five or six years, he was selling 90 million gallons of gasoline annually. But as the years went by, he discovered even though he was selling more and more product, his profit margin wasn't what it was in other businesses, and he finally decided to get out of the oil and gas business and into land development and the construction and leasing of buildings.

"I grew the dealership about as big as I could," said Frank, "but the more I learned about the business world, especially during the time I spent as the Chairman of the Board of the Capitol Bank of Commerce, the more I realized development was the way to go for me."

"The one thing you can say about Frank Ramos," said Bill Kristoff, former Mayor of West Sacramento and a current City Council member, "is that when he develops a property, he makes every effort to make sure it's a quality project. He's done a lot of good for this community and his heart is always in the right place when it comes to West Sacramento."

'Now that we're a city and not just part of the county, and now that we have some experienced leaders who are starting to make the difficult decisions, I really believe our best days are ahead of us, and I'm talking about the not too distant future, too.'

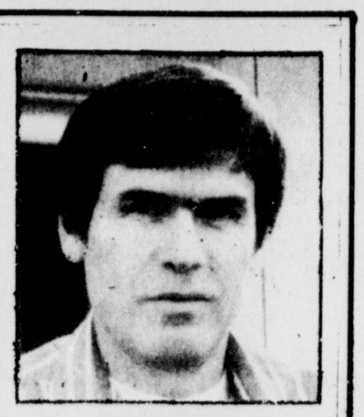

-- FRANK RAMOS

Frank is proud of many of his accomplishments in the business world, but he is especially pleased that he was named California Man of the Year in 1992 by the Mathews Foundation for his volunteer work in trying to increase public awareness about prostate cancer.

"Prostate cancer is one of those diseases which a lot of men just don't want to talk about," explained Frank, "and that's one of the major reasons it's killing so many of us. Men need to know that they have options, and that the quality of their life can be wonderful in every area, even

Arachniphobia can cost you a good night's sleep

The other evening, around midnight, after I thought everyone in the family had gone to bed, I decided to settle down on the couch in the front room and watch a little late night television. As I leisurely flipped through the channels, looking for an old 1930s or 1940s movie to watch, I was suddenly startled by a bloodcurdling cry coming from my bedroom.

I immediately jumped up from my chair and raced into the bedroom and much to my surprise, the light was still on. Even more surprising was the fact that my wife was standing at the foot of the bed and hurling her covers all about.

"Are you okay?" I asked her as I tried to avoid being struck by one of the flying blankets.

Instead of answering me, she screamed again and yanked yet another cover off her bed and began shaking it for all she was worth.

"What's the matter?" I demanded to know.

"There was a spider in my bed," she finally managed to answer.

"A spider?"

"That's right, a spider!"

"What kind of spider?"

"Now how in the world would I know that?" she asked, deciding she better rip the sheets off the bed, too.

"Well," I said as I tried to remain calm while the bed I had been hoping to spend the night in continued to be trashed, "what color was it then?"

"Black I think," she said, rapidly spitting out each word. "No, wait," she added, deciding to correct herself, "I think it was brown. Yes, it was definitely brown. Look, I don't know what color the darn thing was. It was moving too fast."

"It was a fast spider?"

"Very!"

"Did it have any distinguishing marks?"

"What does that mean? It looked like all spiders look. Ugly!"

"I just wanted to know if it had a red stomach?"

"Why do you want to know that?"

"Because it may have been a black widow. They have red stomachs, and we don't want a black widow spider in our bed."

"My god," she said, frightened all over again, "do you think it could have been a black widow?"

"Maybe. How big was it?"

"Medium."

"It was a medium-sized spider?"

"That's right, medium! You know, between big and little."

"Look," I said, trying to calm down the conversation a bit, "why don't you just tell me exactly what happened."

"Okay," she began to explain, "I came into the bedroom, turned on both lights like I do every night so I can read for awhile, and began pulling down the covers."

"Then what happened?" I asked, sensing that she needed a little encouragement to continue recalling the obviously upsetting events of the past few minutes.

"Then I saw it."

"The spider?"

"Yes. And do you know what it did?"

"What?"

"It spotted me and went flying across the sheets."

"It was flying?"

"Yes. I never knew a spider could move so fast."

"Then what did you do?"

"Well, I thought I better start shaking the covers until it dropped on the floor so I could step on it and kill it."

"Good thinking."

"You know, I think I may have hurt my shoulder shaking all those darn covers," she said, rubbing her right shoulder with her left hand.

"Then what happened?"

"Well, I finally shook the spider onto the floor, but when I went to step on it, I realized I didn't have any shoes on. It didn't matter anyway, because it somehow got on the top of my foot and started running right up my leg. That's when I screamed."

"Well, I can certainly understand that," I said, suddenly realizing that there wasn't a cover, sheet or pillow left on my bed, "but do you really think you should let a little old spider scare you like that?" My question was obviously unwelcome, so I quickly added, "Anyway, the spider is gone now, so why don't I help you remake the bed?"

"Are you kidding?" she asked in amazement. "I'm not sleeping in that bed tonight. No way!"

"Then where are you going to sleep?"

"On the couch. It's too late to vacuum the whole bedroom, but I'll do it tomorrow and make absolutely certain that spider is either dead or gone forever."

With that, she reached down on the floor, grabbed a sheet and a blanket, shook them again real good, and began heading for my couch.

"Hey, wait a minute," I said. "Where am I going to sleep?"

"It shouldn't be a problem for you," she answered matter-of-factly. "You're the one whose not afraid of spiders, remember?"

The Giants took two out of three games from the Dodgers this weekend but their wild-card hopes are down to a whisper and a prayer. The Giants have six games remaining and any combination of three Mets victories or Giants losses would eliminate San Francisco from the wild-card race. In this year of unbelievable Major League baseball accomplishments, Giants Jeff Kent joined Hall of Famer Rogers Hornsby in the record books. Kent and Hornsby are the only second basemen to have batted in 120 RBI's in multiple seasons! How many runs do you think he would have knocked in if he had not missed 24 games in July with a bad knee injury?

Last Friday night in Las Vegas, Oscar De La Hoya abandoned his fight plan with Mexico's great champion Julio Cesar Chavez after a low blow by Chavez turned the fight into the mano-a-mano war that the public paid to see. The aging Chavez just couldn't withstand the punsihment the younger De La Hoya dished out in the 7th and 8th round. His corner men decided not to answer the bell for the ninth round and Oscar was awarded an 8 round TKO. It was probably Chavez's best fight in the last five years but it wasn't enough to dethrone the undefeated Golden Boy from Los Angeles.

Speaking of undefeated, West Sacramento's Willie Jorrin has signed a contract to fight on ESPN on Friday, November 20 at the Arco Arena. This time promoter Don Chargin has lined up Mexican fighter Oscar Larios (28-1-1, with 21 KO's) for these nationally televised bouts which start at 4:30 p.m. Willie's fight will start at 6:10 p.m. Tickets will be priced at $23, $33, and $43.

The Sacramento Knights beat Arizona last Saturday night 8-2 before 5,951 indoor soccer fans. The Knights have two home games remaining, Friday against first place Dallas and Oct. 4 against Portland.

The Raiders (1-2) had their chances to beat Denver last Sunday and even had a early 10-7 lead but in the end it was Oakland, who couldn't handle the Broncos defense. The Broncos intercepted three passes and turned them into a 34-17 victory. This week the Raiders travel to Dallas (10 a.m.) to play the Cowboys. The 49ers (2-0) return to 3 Com Park (1:15 p.m. - FOX) to tangle with the undefeated Atlanta Falcons (2-0) for first place in the Western Division.

Here are this week's picks! (Three week totals are five wins and three losses; I picked two out of three winners last week).

Week three is going to be a tough one to pick three winners, especially with the AFC East taking their bye week, but believe it or not I like the Raiders (+4 points) this week in Dallas. The Cowboys and Raiders know each other very well, having trained and scrimmaged together in Dallas during the pre-season. The Raiders in an upset: Oakland 27, Dallas 24.

The 49ers and Falcons always have close games but this time the Niners defense will provide the extra touchdowns. 49ers 31; Falcons 13. Monday night's game is a pick'em between Detroit and Tampa Bay. Tampa Bay 31, Detroit 27.

See ya next week!

RCHS defeats Canadian team

By Chuck Robinson

The River City High School varsity football team beat Burnaby Central, a team from Canada, last Friday night, 35 to 28. RC scored first on a 4-yard run by Malfred Shaw and Morton Geivett kicked the conversion to lead 7 to 0. Burnaby came back and scored on a 7-yard run and the kick was good to tie 7 to 7. Burnaby scored again on a 1-yard run and kicked to lead 14 to 7.

In the second quarter, RC scored on a 19-yard pass from Brady Tacdol to Malcom Floyd and the kick was blocked to trail 14 to 13.

In the third quarter, RC scored on a 23-yard pass from Tacdol to Eric King and Tacdol passed to Floyd for the conversion to lead, 21 to 14. Burnaby scored on a 45-yard pass and kicked to tie, 21 to 21. RC scored on a 55-yard run by Shaw and Geivett kicked to lead 28 to 21.

In the fourth quarter, Floyd on an end run scored on a 30-yard run and Geivette kicked to lead, 35 to 21. With 1:21 left, Burnaby scored on a 7-yard run and kicked to end RC 35, Burnaby Central 28.

Shaw rushed 23 times for 230 yards and two touchdowns. Tacdol completed 5 passes for 94 yards, two touchdowns and 1 conversion.

The junior varsity team played in Dixon but I didn't get any of the results.

This Friday, the Raiders will travel to Vanden. J.V. time is 5:30 p.m.; varsity will play at 7:30.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial:

You can't count on the FPPC to dispense fairness

Those familiar with the state of the justice system in this city, state and country know that justice is not an easy thing to get. Whether it is family court, the criminal justice system, or the election system, fairness is not something even we Americans can take for granted.

California has an election campaign watchdog agency called the Fair Political Practices Commission -- but this is another case of a "watchdog" with the personality of a "lapdog." Very few of the complaints lodged with the FPPC are seriously pondered -- let alone pursued with a steely eye for justice. Most complaints are shrugged off.

There is no attempt within these comments to render a judgment on the complaints to the FPPC filed by two West Sacramento city council candidates against a third candidate in recent days; just an acknowledgement (and warning) here that our system is poorly set up to referee campaign problems and to mete out punishment when deserved.

The pattern is that small campaign violations -- especially in "small" campaigns, such as all of those West Sacramentans care so much about in their own city -- tend to go unpunished, leaving the perpetrators free to benefit from their actions. Only the occasional big violation, in a "big" campaign tends to receive any scrutiny.

A couple of West Sacramento incidents from elections past may serve as examples:

In 1996, someone still unknown sent out a fake flyer criticizing one city council candidate, with the name of another candidate falsely given as the author. Both candidates were stained by the fallout from the flyer. Locals, upset by this clear example of somebody's dirty tricks, filed a complaint with the FPPC. But anybody expecting the F.B.I. to come to town taking fingerprint and hair samples from the mailers was mistaken; there was no serious investigation and the perpetrators have yet to be identified. The event just didn't score on the FPPC's Richter Scale.

In 1990 (the year of the QUAD initiative and the most heated city council race yet in this young city), many people would name the famous city council/developer Club Pheasant banquet -- which garnered statewide media attention -- as a defining event of the campaign trail. The event was organized by a professionally-staffed campaign group with a six-figure budget, yet when the group's campaign expenditures were turned in, lo and behold, there was no mention of who paid for this banquet -- the single most prominent expenditure of the campaign.

This gap in reporting would make a reasonable person wonder about the integrity of the rest of the campaign's financial reporting. Yet the FPPC was satisfied with the campaign group's explanation of a simple oversight in reporting, and no further punishment, or scrutiny, followed.

Regrettably, anyone who depends on government agencies to ensure honesty and fairness in our elections is naive.

Letters to the Editor

Mayor's rebuttal

This serves as my response to Mr. Frugoli's recent letter articulating his many reasons for opposing my candidacy for City Council. With all due respect, Mr. Frugoli is certainly entitled to his opinion, but for the record, I was unable to find anything truthful or accurate in his letter. Candidly, it would take too much time and space to respond point-by-point, however, I would like to comment on several gross misstatements.

WES BEERS

The issue of zoning on his property is a matter of public record. Contrary to his letter he purchased the property in November of 1994 with full knowledge that the property was being rezoned to residential. From a public policy perspective, a large commercial project at that site would defeat the neighborhood commercial in the villages and most importantly would require the City the widen Jefferson to six lanes. I have been very clear that I will not support six lanes on Jefferson, which is why I continue to oppose his demands.

His Mello-Roos Bond payments are $100 a year per acre obligations that he knowingly assumed when he purchased the Gregory property and he voted to place a Mello-Roos Bond on another of his Southport properties in 1992. These bonds were for specific amounts for offsite design work, primarily for the new bridge, that were necessary for the property owners to be able to develop their property. Once the bonds are retired, the payments obligation ends. All property owners are treated the same in this voluntary assessment district that specifically benefits their property, which is only fair so existing long time residents do not foot the bill for new development.

City buildings fees for an average size home are about $21,000 not $38,000. This is the cost determined by engineers to provide sewer, water, roads, and parks, etc. to serve each new household. These costs are simply the base cost necessary for the City to provide services. Our analysis shows that our fees are average for the region. Additionally, the school district imposes a school fee of approximately $5,000 per household for new school facilities. By Council policy these City fees are reviewed annually and are subject to public hearing prior to adoption.

Frankly, there is no reason to respond to the rest of Mr. Frugoli's accusations because they are completely false, nonsense or his personal viewpoint. It is unfortunate that Mr. Frugoli feels compelled to go to the extremes of misstating the facts and attempting to buy this election in order to have his special interests prevail over the broader interests of West Sacramento.

Councilman's rebuttal

Last week, you published a letter by Mr. Bill Resendez, who complained that I voted against the sale of a "shared equity" home to Mr. Resendez and several partners when the City Council approved the sale in April. In his letter, Mr. Resendez says that he still does not understand why I opposed the sale, so please allow me to explain my vote.

In 1993, the Redevelopment Agency purchased several single-family homes as part of the Shared Equity Housing Program, an affordable housing program for low-income buyers. This particular home required a Redevelopment Agency loan of more than $70,000 in order for the buyer to purchase it. In other words, a public subsidy of more than $70,000 was given for the purchase of a home worth less than $130,000.

CHRISTOPHER CABALDON

Under the program, the City of West Sacramento guarantees that the homeowner is protected against any loss of equity due to dips in the real estate market -- but the homeowner keeps any equity windfalls arising from market booms. As a result, the City loses thousands of dollars every time a shared equity home sells to another subsidized buyer.

Mr. Resendez and the other three adults who wanted to jointly purchase and occupy the shared equity home met all of the requirements for low-income buyers. My objection is not to them as buyers, although I do believe that we should instead focus on assisting single families afford single-family residences.

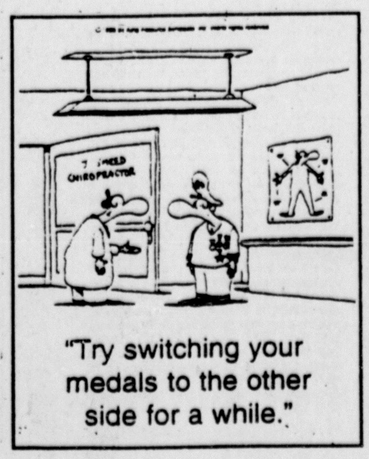

The sale of this home to Mr. Resendez and his three adult partners is likely to cost the citizens of this community as much as $30,000. The whole Shared Equity Housing Program is a bad financial investment for the City's scarce dollars, and a very poor way of improving the quality and affordability of West Sacramento's housing stock. As I did with the Resendez sale, I will vote against each resale of the shared equity homes.

Board candidate's rebuttal

I am a life long member of this community. I am running for the two-year term of the Washington Unified School Board. I was not going to use the local paper to aid in running my political campaign but the letter from Edward Hocking in the September 16 issue deserves a response. Mr. Hocking is concerned about board member candidates being on the School Bond Task Force steering committee. It is a "conflict of interest" as he states it.

I served as a member of the Facilities Task Force for 1997/1998. The Task Force met once a month for six months. Our task was to discuss solutions and ideas to make better use of the existing facilities and to recommend new facilities to house the students of West Sacramento in a safe and educational environment. Some of the recommendations presented to the School Board included bringing the 6th grade back to the elementary level to alleviate some of the stress of housing too many students at Golden State Middle School. Another recommendation was to put before the electorate a Bond Measure for a new High School. I served on the Facilities committee and I feel that I have a right to continue and finish the job that I have started. Whether I am elected to the School Board or not, my feelings on this issue will not change. We are in desperate need of a new High School. I should not and will not "feel badly" for volunteering to make this community a better place to live.

"Try switching your medals to the other side for a while."

Before closing I would like to say, the members of the Facilities Task Force who did not live in this community were specialists in their field and employees of this district. They brought a variety of ideas and recommendations to the table. Most were specialists in their field! Living or not living in this community is irrelevant if they are willing to give their time and expertise to help solve our facilities problems. Our employees face our facility problems every day. What better source of information could we ask for? What we (the community) need to focus on the real issue, a new High School for our kids. Our children and this community deserve is a 21st century High School that we can all be proud of. Other communities provide them, and so can we.

I believe the way to campaign is to walk the community and talk to the voters, which is the way I will run my campaign. I will not site in my living room and write letter to the editor criticizing those who are trying to help this community. We can be part of the problem or part of the solution. For my child and the children of this entire community, I choose the latter.

Dunn should replace Fazio

Congressman Fazio is retiring this year after having served his District well. He has always secured support of all parties and this despite the fact that he was known to be a Democrat. Now the Republicans have targeted the District and, apparently, because they know that they have fewer registered voters than the Democrats, they are financing a type of mail blitz extolling the Republican candidate but never revealing that he is a Republican. Of course, come election day the ballot will "out" him.

By now we have received four of his personal letters. Two of them purport to be from separate organizations (though mailed from his office and paid for by his campaign). In one, he comes out for the Auburn Dam as the solution to our water and flood programs; he takes the Doolittle solution (development priority), ignoring Fazio's and Matsui's plan which gives us flood protection from the American and Sacramento Rivers. The last letter, from members of the "Senior Power Campaign," purports to give us a "real plan" for protecting Social Security, ignoring the current failure of Republicans to support Democratic bills to strengthen Social Security NOW. My suggestion to this Republican candidate is that he henceforth admit he is a Republican and then try to sell his platform. That would be making democracy work.

More on local artist

Recently, you printed a story on Steve Gillman, one of the sculptors creating the California Veteran's Memorial at Capitol Park. Your readers may be interested to know that Mr. Gillman has two sculptures at the University of California, Davis campus. I have enclosed a photograph of one of the sculptures: The Stone Poem, which is located to the rear of the Silo building on the campus. It consists of nine vertical and horizontal steps made of granite.

Mr. Gillman's other sculpture on the campus is located behind the Art Department by Putah Creek. Unfortunately, I haven't seen this work yet.

West Sacramento should be proud to have produced such a professional artist as Steve Gillman. I hope everyone will have the opportunity to visit the California Veteran's Memorial, which is located between 13th and 14th Streets on N Street. It is a beautiful monument honoring our veterans.

Remember the library's needs

(An open letter to Mayor Wes Beers and Members of the City Council):

I saw the need to contact you after attending the Public Presentation of the new Civic Center on August 26. Specifically, I was very disappointed to find that in a project with a $12 million construction budget, that there was not a single dime earmarked for the library.

I am the West Sacramento Housing Advisory Commission's appointee to the Civic Center task force, and since the meetings were stopped after the city acquired the building on Stone Blvd. I hadn't been notified of any planning meetings on the Civic Center. I assume that some kind of discussions were held, and frankly, I'm wondering why the HAC, as well as representatives from the Library have been excluded from them. This project affects the heart of the city, and all residents should be included.

While I realize that the library is a county agency and use of city funding for a building is atypical, it is possible to use city monies for construction of library building. Davis did it. And in fairness, the Turner Branch Library has always been a city library; even a de facto Community Center since before the day the city incorporated.

The prospective plan for the Civic Center is, to put it bluntly, crowded. Acquiring property further west on Merkley for a new library would allow the approx. 15,000 square foot library site to be added to the planned parcel. This would allow more green space and open up room for a few more of the required parking spaces the present design lacks.

The library is bursting at the seams. Designed to carry 35,000 books, it now holds twice that. Books need to be held on carts as there is simply to room to shelve them. Should this be necessary in the "Premier City of the Sacramento Valley?"

The currently Civic Center plan includes a Senior Center costing approx. $1.62 million. While I applaud the city's efforts in developing a recreational facility for senior use, seniors 60 and over constitute only 18% of the population of the city. A library can be and is used by all residents, as a study place, a research center and a source for the enjoyment of reading, and I urge you with the strongest possible conviction to include a new, expanded library in the budget of the Civic Center Project.

Dumping problem

(Editor's note: the author included a photograph of garbage dumped illegally, but the photo would not reproduce adequately.)

I took this picture Sunday, Sept. 13 at the corner of the deep water channel and the Sacramento River on the southwest side. If I would have seen who did it, I would have shown them, too.

This makes it bad for those that want to have access to the rivers and sloughs. People would like to fish along the canal at Jefferson Blvd. and in back of the Port area. I have seen where people dumped the trash and other discards along in back of the Port area, until they blocked there entrance, I am retired and would enjoy riding along the country side without seeing this.

Priorities: tobacco

On or about September 1, 1998, C-Span carried a discussion of an "Anti-Tobacco" moves and tobacco's massive and thus far effective resistance to our U.S. Congressional "leadership." While former FDA Commissioner Dr. David Kessler -- who began what was to be a meaningful campaign to classify tobacco as an addictive drug -- gave us the update we expected, it was his predecessor, former Surgeon General Dr. C. Everett Koop (1981-89), who dropped the bombshell.

To paraphrase, Dr. Koop expressed his strong disgust at various Congressional Republican leaders and reps from "tobacco states" -- even though he has been a lifetime Republican. In strong terms, Dr. Koop criticized those reps for creating this Monica-Gate at the White House, noting that Bill Clinton was elected twice to the Presidency and if she (Miss Lewinsky) felt she was wronged, why did she keep coming back for more? Why did she not just quit? (She stayed on as per connections with Linda Tripp and Lucianne Goldberg, the latter a former Richard Nixon aide, who hates Bill Clinton.) Dr. Koop (and Dr. Kessler) noted that most cigarette smokers start as kids! Tobacco aims too much of their ads at kids; e.g., the Joe Camel ads.

But most noteworthy, Dr. Koop reminded us of the many millions of lives shortened by tobacco...and the many billions of taxpayers' dollars we've paid out since the mid-'60s for tobacco-related illnesses and premature deaths. And the tobacco leaders not only lied to Congress when they told California Congressman Henry Waxman's committee that "they had no knowledge of any negative effect tobacco had on one's health," but tobacco knew since the mid-'60s that tobacco consumption causes cancer! (So if GOP insists that Bill Clinton pay for all of those court costs since January for fibbing about Monica-Gate, why doesn't the GOP step forward and accept responsibility for tobacco's financial and health wrongs? They graciously accept tobacco's many millions in political contributions...something now allowed with "soft money" vs. "hard money.") And what real punishment has big tobacco been dealt for its big lies, ill-gotten profits, etc.?

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott (R-Mississippi) worries about Bill Clinton's character. He and other tobacco-supported members of Congress should look themselves in the mirrors and ask, "If we're coming down so hard on Bill Clinton and what should be his private sex life with consenting adults (and considering what should have been the taxpayers' cost on this), why aren't we taking steps to reduce tobacco consumption, assess big tobacco and quit taking their money that promotes nothing less than ill health of constituents?" Or are the Trent Lotts answering, "But big tobacco is our real constituent and as long as we keep kicking Bill Clinton around, nobody will notice." Oh, yeah? Ask your Congressional Reps and see. Or are they too busy releasing the ("Mr. Tobacco") Ken Starr report to public before Clinton's side is heard from? This could set a dangerous precedent.

Support heart charity

Our son Tyler will be three-years-old on Dec. 21 thanks to cardiovascular research funded by the American Heart Association. Doctors have told us if he had been born just five years earlier, he would never have survived.

That's why we are actively supporting the USCS International American Heart Walk in William Land Park on Sept. 26. Our employers, co-workers, family and friends are also involved because they also know first-hand the impact upon any family with a newborn suffering congenital heart defects.

Tyler had six heart procedures -- including three open heart surgeries -- in the first 40 days of his life. Last month, doctors predicted a healthy future for our rambunctious toddler -- he has no limitations; he will be able to play sports in school; he will live a normal life.

Each year, 32,000 babies in America are born with congenital heart defects. There are at least 35 types of defects recognized. In most cases, scientists don't know why they occur. Research will continue to unlock this mystery and give hope to those facing this heartbreaking diagnosis. Cardiovascular diseases which touch each family in some way since heart disease is the number one killer in American.

That's why it is important we all support the USCS International American Heart Walk to raise funds for lifesaving cardiovascular research. Call the American Heart Association office in Sacramento at (916) 446-6505 to sign up as an individual walker or register your co-workers as a team on Sept. 26.

We are walking for Tyler and all the babies like him whose lives can be saved through American Heart Association research.

after prostate surgery. But most important of all, they need to have regular yearly checkups once they get to be about 50 years old."

Frank had just turned 60 when he was diagnosed with prostate cancer and the news shocked him.

"When my doctor called and told me that three of the six biopsies they had taken were malignant, I had a hard time believing him," said Frank. "I even went down to the lab and asked them if they could have made a mistake. Anyway, they gave me three choices. I could take hormones and hope for the best, or have radiation and chemotherapy treatments, or have my prostate removed. I decided to go the surgical route, and have never regretted my decision. My surgeon did a great job and every checkup I've had for the past six years has been just fine. I've talked to hundreds of men about this problem, and my door is always open to anyone who needs to discuss his options. The important thing is to get this disease out in the open so it can be diagnosed early. We can save countless lives that way."

Philip and Margaret Crawford have lived next door to the Ramos family for decades and Margaret said, "Frank and Joanne are the very best neighbors a person could hope to have and we're so happy that Frank's health is just fine now. Philip and I never had children of our own so we've really enjoyed watching the Ramos children grow up. It's a wonderful family, and we love them dearly."

Frank sees a bright future not only for himself and his family, but also for West Sacramento.

"When I first came to West Sacramento," said Frank, "I think there were about 27,000 people living here, and that number hasn't really gone up dramatically like it has in other nearby communities. For instance, Woodland used to have a population of about 10,000 and now its up to about 50,000. The same thing has happened in Davis and Folsom and a number of other areas. But now that we're a city and not just part of the county, and now that we have some experienced leaders who are starting to make the difficult decisions, I really believe our best days are ahead of us, and I'm talking about the not too distant future, too."

Grace Ohlson, a longtime local political activist said, "There have been times when Frank and I have had different perspectives on specific growth issues, but our goals have always been the same and there is absolutely no question that Frank and his family have worked very hard to make West Sacramento a better place to live. I'm especially pleased with his recent efforts to help West Sacramento create a quality city center."

"I'm a very lucky man," said Frank, "and I've been blessed in so many ways. I live in a town I love, I've been married for 44 years to my high school sweetheart, I've got four great sons, a brother I still talk to daily, and just about everything else a man could ask for. Plus I love my work and enjoy getting up and going to the office every single day. So you'll never see Frank Ramos retire. There's still too much work to be done."

In addition to sons Tom, Dan, Mick and Kevin, Frank and Joanne also have four granddaughters and five grandsons.

earlier public comments when he suggested that the board's committee designing the school bond should not be made up of experts who do not live in the district.

"The best way to approach a school bond is to utilize the community, and not depend on people from outside the community," Hocking said. Grace Ohlson said it best, that all members of the committee should be members of the community."

He added that the school board needs to spend a lot of time talking to people who have traditionally opposed a local school bond measure, and learning what can be done to change their minds. This kind of communication with the public is important as an ongoing practice for the board, he said.

"I think the board needs to talk to the community regularly -- it's just not acceptable to talk to the community only once every four years."

Yet for all his support of a school bond for W.U.S.D., Hocking feels that a goal of passing a school bond in 1999 may be unrealistic.

"I'm looking at June or even November of 2000," he explained. "It seems like a long time away, but if we screw this up, when are we going to get another chance?"

Hocking was directly critical of the members of the 1997 school board (all current members except Dave Farmer) who were sitting at the time of their brief appointment of Juan Barcenas to fill a vacancy. Hocking felt that he was falsely branded as a racist during the resulting controversy, and that he was falsely "accused of circulating a petition to recall Juan Barcenas -- a petition I never saw and said I would not sign if it were presented to me."

"This is the board that let that happen, so what does that say about their integrity and their principals? As a candidate, I do not want that board to give me an endorsement."

Hocking was asked to comment on the district's performance on students' standardized testing.

"The test scores in reading in math seem to be consistently dropping," he responded. "One of the problems I see is the articulation between elementary schools, middle school and high school. I don't think there's enough coordination between them. Students enter middle school when they've barely figured out elementary school, and when they enter high school they're in that fog again."

But he said that any deep changes in the district's approach to teaching will take time.

"At a presentation, (School Superintendent) Dr. Kelleher mentioned improving by ten percentage points in three years, which I think is the length of his contract. But I was thinking, it's probably going to take three years just for staff to figure (the plan) out."

Hocking stated that he hopes to fight a district culture which includes a "fear of speaking out, especially among teachers. The teachers are our front line troops, and I think they're being ignored."

Born in Germany, Hocking travelled with his family (his father was in the military), spending part of his youth in Fairbanks, Alaska. He served in the Army for three years, including a Bronze Star-decorated term in the infantry in Vietnam.

He is married, with one adult child who graduated outside of W.U.S.D., a second who graduated from River City High School in 1992, and a daughter currently at the high school. He works as a complaint investigator with the state Dept. of Alcohol and Drug Programs, and has taken two years of college plus various classes and training programs related to his career.

Hocking has served on local elementary school site councils and organizations affiliated with Golden State Middle School and River City High School. He is a current member of the R.C.H.S. booster club (and serves up burgers at football games), and is a member of the city parks commission.

Hocking joins fellow candidates Karen Bishop, Karl Machschefes, Julie Hart Martin and James "J.C." Myers III in seeking election to the single, two-year term on the ballot for W.U.S.D. in November.

Potnick scores high on math test

West Sacramento native Jason Potnick, 19, has received the top score among Los Rios College District students taking a standardized, nationwide college math test.

His score also placed him 27th in the western division of schools taking the test and a hair's breadth away from making the top 40 students' list overall in results for the "AMATYC" test.

The test consists of three rounds -- one in the fall and two in the spring -- each comprising 20 questions, including "a little bit from every aspect, trigonometry through calculus," Potnick explained.

JASON POTNICK

A sophomore at Sacramento City College, Potnick intends to transfer to either the University of California, Berkeley (where he has already been accepted), or to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (where he is awaiting a decision on acceptance) in the fall of 1999.

He is studying to be a computer engineer.

Banned Book Week, celebrating the freedom to read, begins on September 26. The library will display books that have been censored, banned, challenged or made unavailable to the public in schools and/or libraries in the past. The reasons given for wanting to ban individuals from reading the materials are as varied as the titles. Obscene language, suicide, death, sexuality, and evolution are just a few of the subjects censored. Books by children's authors such as Dr. Seuss, Roald Dahl, and Judy Blume have not escaped the censorship efforts. Celebrate your freedom to read at the library, located at 1212 Merkley Ave.
